* Overall evaluation of instructor out of a possible score of 5.

Ag Econ 299 Independent Study for undergraduates.

Ag Econ 420 Production Economics is a required undergraduate course. Zepeda developed a new curriculum which included topics on linear programming.

Ag Econ 426 Quantitative Methods in Agricultural Economics (Crosslisted with Econ 426.) Use of economics and statistics to obtain quantitative answers to problems faced by decision makers. Homework problems requiring use of computers and software packages to gain experience working with numbers in context of specific problems.

Ag Econ 636 Applied Econometric Analysis. Statistical concepts and inference for economic analysis. Derivation and properties of simple and general linear models. Specifications, estimation, and inference of empirical models. Some knowledge of matrix algebra is presumed.

Ag Econ 740 Intermediate Production Economics is a new graduate elective course which Zepeda developed for masters and Ph.D. students to present production theory and applications. The course was completely revised in 1993 in response to changes in the curriculum of the required masters level microeconomic theory course and an econometrics course was made a prerequisite.

Ag Econ 799 Teaching Practicum for graduate students.

Ag Econ 999 Independent Study for graduate students.

Cnsr Sci 299 Independent Study for undergraduates

Spring 2008 supervised Donovan Malloy: independent study to increase student representation on Campus Planning Committee and University Academic Planning Council.

Cnsr Sci 475 Family Economics is a microeconomic theory course on the economics of the family. The course focuses on economic models of consumer choice, labor force participation, household production, savings and investment, fertility, human capital, marriage and divorce.

Cnsr Sci 477 Consumer and the Market Analysis of the consumer's market, consumer's behavior, and government policies affecting the consumer in the American economy. Prerequisite: Econ 101 Principles of Microeconomics.

Cnsr Sci 501 Statistical Methods in Consumer Science fulfills the Consumer Science analytic methods undergraduate requirement. This is an introductory regression course. It is assumed that the student has had a basic course on probability and statistics. The purpose of the class is to teach the appropriate basic techniques to estimate behavioral relationships with empirical data. The focus of the course is on how to carry out an empirical project, therefore a class project involving statistical analysis and interpretation of data is required. Homework will involve statistical analysis of data using computers. Experience with spreadsheets is desirable.

Cnsr Sci 501 Sustainable and Socially Just Consumption Fall 2006, 2007, 2008, Spring 2008, 2009
Cnsr Sci 360, Fall 2009, 2011, Spring 2013, 2014, 2015

Taught as a freshman interest group (FIGS) course offered to incoming freshmen in the Fall 2006-2008. Starting Spring 2008, course for Consumer Science majors. This course explores the role that consumers play in promoting sustainability and social justice. Students complete a literature review, research proposal, design a consumer survey, collect and analyze consumer data and present their results in a paper and presentation on topic of their choice related to sustainable and or socially just consumption. Starting in 2014 taught as a large lecture (90-120) with discussion sections, students are required to do a course project: presentation or film.

Cnsr Sci 501-075 Independent Study As faculty advisor for Slow Food UW, students complete a variety of projects related to good, clean fair food, including: family dinner night, working with UW food service to include locally produced food, outreach events and partnerships with local community.

Cnsr Sci 648 (748 from 2005 onward) The Economic Organization of the Household applies intermediate microeconomic theory to analyze household resource allocation decisions. Surveys current household economic decision theories and models. Topics include life cycle analysis of goods and services consumption, paid work, household production, and leisure time allocation, and decisions about fertility, marriage and divorce.

Cnsr Sci 699 Independent Study for undergraduate students.

Fall 2008, independent study for Slow Food UW: grant writing, bylaws, communication

Fall 2001, independent study on women and micro-credit.

Spring 2001, WISPRG intern.

Cnsr Sci 960 Research Topics

2003 – Seminar in Development Studies focused on research topics and skills to conduct research in developing countries.

2002 & 2004 – Seminar in Consumer Research develops graduate students' understanding of how quality research is carried out. The goals include developing students' research skills and developing a research proposal, elements of a research paper, funding, grant proposals, research presentations, professional meetings, reviewing and evaluating research, professional standards and professional ethics.

Cnsr Sci 999 Independent Study for graduate students.

Spring 2013 "Fear based appeals to prevent texting and driving" Eli McVey MS student.

Fall 2002-curriculum evaluation for the Development Studies PhD program.

Spring 2001 - Advanced Household Economics was taught as an independent study. It covered different theoretical approaches to modeling household economic behavior: the unitary household or new home economics model of behavior, feminist critiques of this approach, and bargaining approaches to modeling household behavior. Topics examined include the division of labor in households, time use, marriage and fertility decisions, altruism in the family, intergenerational transfers and investment in human capital (education).

Env Studies 692 Senior Thesis.

Env Studies 699 Independent Study for undergraduates.

Spring & Fall 2014, Slow Food UW Outreach course. SFUW interns meet weekly to discuss readings and films, plan and execute outreach projects: Cook-to –Connect, Dormant Chef, and Recipes for Change.

Env Studies 990 Research Independent Study for graduate students

Fall 2008 - research and survey design, interview transcription and analysis of Kenyan community organic agriculture project.

Organized a Gender Economics Seminar (non credit) biweekly Spring, Fall 1994, and Spring 1995.

Intl St 310-30 International Learning Community Seminar “What is food?” Course available to students living in the International Learning Community dorms (mostly freshmen). This is a hands-on, brains-on class about food. While we procure food, cook meals and eat, we will discuss readings about what is food, where it comes from, and its relationship to culture, health, social justice and sustainability.
